Sarah-Jane

Hi, I'm Sarah-Jane and I blog about home interiors, lifestyle and our holiday cottage on the Cornish coast at @justalittlebuild.

When we took over Leat House, a 200 year old cottage near Port Isaac, three years ago I was keen to retain all the period features such as the exposed stone walls and fireplaces but also introduce modern clean lines and easy to clean surfaces so that anyone staying at the house can relax and simply enjoy some time away from the hustle and bustle.

I wanted to include Karndean flooring into the design as this has a realistic look of wood but also provides a practical and durable surface that would stand up to the demands of a holiday rental property.

We fell in love with Country Oak from the Van Gogh range after seeing it in-situ within an interiors shop. We loved how authentic the wood effect design looked with its weathered textures and the soft grey-brown colour tones. I knew that this would be a ideal floor to complement the simple style of the functional spaces in the cottage such as the utility room, larder and bathrooms.

We are delighted with the results. The Karndean flooring fits in really well with the original period features of the cottage and blends perfectly with the pared back coastal charm of the property.

Meet the home designer

"I knew I wanted to create an easy-going interior with a coastal theme where families could kick back and relax." Sarah-Jane shares.

Create an authentic rustic appearance of unfinished timbers with Country Oak's faithfully recreated oak grain and gentle cool mid-brown tones.
